

☩ Auset returned back to Egypt with the chest containing Ausar's lifeless body. She hid the body in the marshes of the Nile Delta. Auset used her magical powers [according to Pyramid Texts number 632, 1636, and murals at Abydos and Philae] to transform herself into a dove. Drawing Ausar's essence from him, she conceived a child—Heru (Horus). In other words, Auset was impregnated by the holy ghost of Ausar. [See the Ancient Egyptian temple depiction below.]

- ☛ This action symbolizes reincarnation and spiritual rebirth—a key to understanding the Egyptian belief in life after death.

Ancient Egyptian temple depiction showing Auset on the left, as her magical essence embodied in the flying dove(s), draws the essence of Ausar to be impregnated. On the left, a frog-headed netert, Heqet, symbolizes the power of fertility, representing conception and procreation.

- ☩ Auset's conception of Heru by no living man is the oldest documented version of immaculate conception. The supernatural conception and the virgin birth of Heru (Horus) found their way into Christianity.

Auset's (Isis') role in the Egyptian Model Story and the story of the Virgin Mary are strikingly similar, for both were able to conceive without male impregnation, and, as such, Auset was revered as the Virgin Mother.

- ☩ The Egyptian origin of the name Mary is found on page 74 of this book.
- ☩ The Egyptian origin of the familiar Christian scene of the Virgin and Child is found on page 75 of this book.
- ☩ The Egyptian origin and meaning of Christ being Heru, son of Auset, was explained in chapter 6 of this book.
- ☩ More about the Ancient Egyptian concept of holy (virgin) conception/birth is found on pages 66 and 70 of this book.
More about the ideal of virginity in the Ancient Egyptian culture is found on page 75 of this book.

- ☩ When Set heard about the new child (Heru), Set went to kill the newborn. Hearing that Set was coming, Auset was told to take him to a secluded spot in the marshes of the Nile Delta [as per the Ancient Egyptian temple depiction shown herein].

- ☩ This is the source of the story in which Herod, upon hearing about the birth of the biblical Jesus, set out to destroy all the newborn males. In the New Testament the angel of the Lord says to Joseph, “Arise and take the young child and his mother and flee into Egypt.”
